Wreck Diving German Submarine U-1105

Join Sea Ventures in exploring the only German U-boat at the bottom of the Potomac.

In 1944 a modified Type VII-C German submarine, began her brief and dramatic wartime career. Germany used its precious supply of rubber to coat the outer skin of less than 10 experimental submarines. The mission of the U-1105 was to find an Allied combat ship and sink it. It was then to descend to 100 meters (330 fsw) and hold that depth to determine whether the Allied ships could find it using sonar. The test was successful. They could not. Weeks later the war ended. The sub surrendered and was brought to the Potomac River. It was sunk the final time near Piney Point, Maryland on September 19, 1949. It has been there since.

Our dive boat is the Audry B. (pictured above) skippered by Captain Bob. Captain Bob has been plying the waters of the Chesapeake for 30 years. You can expect a depth of 84 feet to the silt. Visibility can range from 2 feet to 10 feet. Water temperatures will be between 52 and 62 degrees. It is a challenging, but invigorating dive.
